Two neighbours whose paths cross thanks to a domestic incident begin a strange game: recycling time. They decide to tell each other about their own and other people's memories, scouring the past to rescue the little stories forgotten in its folds. The rules of the game allow for invention, dreams and journeys. Señora Really and her friend Dora learn how to weave their tales together until they make up the fabric of their story, the one they would have liked to live. And the ones that made them forget time and the rush of the outside world. A toast to friendship that comes from knowing how to listen and allowing oneself to be surprised by life.
