First title of a series of 6 picture books for readers of 5 years old and up. Misha, the purple cat, just started first grade. She's a prankster with a hot temper and a quick tongue, but underneath the huff and puff a soft heart beats. This series follows Misha and her friends as they discover how to have fun facing everyday childhood problems and worries such as not wanting to be different, being scared of the dark, not wanting to go to school or to have a brother.

In "¡NO QUIERO SER VIOLETA!" (I don't want to be purple!): Misha is sick of being purple. None of the other cats around her are purple... Misha wants to change her colour... But thanks to her grandfather and an old photo album, Misha and her friends start a magical trip and discover how difference is pleasant and important.

"Tales (...) with one of the strongest narrative voices, entertaining and very fresh."

El Mundo

With intelligence and humour, Stanton raises and resolves conflicts in an "exemplary" way, but without being too teaching (...) The texts are fresh, dynamic, punctuated by dialogue out of life itself and the illustrations are designed to draw attention, but without causing so much surprise that children cannot identify with them and recognize their world full of fun details.
