It's always been clear that, to certain people, it matters a lot who you go hand in hand with down the street. Even now there are some that like to classify, sanction and make laws about feelings. Are they so dangerous? "Critters, Love and Stuff" is a book about love and about freedom. It is about equality and respect. Funny, daring, ironic and tender. No filters. This book should be shared between parents and children, used to start conversations and ask questions, learn (especially for kids to learn about themselves)... Above all, it's a book to enjoy that magic moment of reading together, as equals. In other words, this book really appeals to everyone. It's a book that let's parents see the world like their kids - all kids - see it: without rules, systems, or prejudices. Because we don't all have to be the same.
