Paula has always wanted to travel to the moon. She has tried all sorts of things to get there, from standing on her father's shoulders to building a rocket powered by soap bubbles and kites. But Paula keeps dreaming of getting there, and every night she thinks about how she will learn to defy the laws of gravity when she grows up. This book comes from a micro series of children's mini-fiction first published on the author's Twitter account, and tells the fantasies of a little girl who dreams of one day visiting the moon. With Sonja Wimmer's wonderful illustrations we travel with Paula into her dream of reaching a goal that seems so close.
